

I have previously been homeless three times in my life.

I am now only 24 years old.

What would of ended my homelessness?

Actually being given a chance by a real estate or if housing didn't take so long and the process didn't as long either.

I might have avoided homelessness if the government provided:

More social support services that also didn't take so long more like a crisis support service to see somebody without it taking weeks.

What would I like to tell the government about being homeless?

It doesn't just rip away material things it rips your heart inside-out, it tears you so far down till you feel like you're worthless and nothing. This has cost me my friends, some of my family, my job all because of how this mentally affects my life still does and it is extremely hard to re build a life not to mention the financial downfall it comes with as well.

I hope somebody actually reads this and realise how hard homelessness actually is.
