Having study criminal psychology,I understand why sexy offenders offended & they have a chance with changing behaviour & getting support. But the victim/ victims are left with having to go through the horrific legal system, then are left picking up the pieces..My cousins daughter was groomed by a neighbours son , he helped the grandmother by gardening ect..Then he took her grand child to the milk bar for lollies, he stopped at a tree and put his hands down her pants ect..sexually assault her. He then came back a week later to asking her grand mother to take her again..the child protested & screamed. She told her grand mother everything and he was charged by the police and in their words lucky to get a sentence..the scary thing was no one told the grand mother that he had been in trouble for collecting child pornographer. This could have been avoided if they knew who had moved in next door and I believe it would also make the sex offender responsible for his actions and it would on social media protecting children and not only children ,but men and women who are also victims of sexual assault.
