YOUR SUBMISSION

Legalisation of cannabis would have several measurable, positive impacts on Victorian society, as indicated by success in other locations around the world. Eliminating charges for possession and cultivation would see reduced pressure on police, prisons and associated entities, as well as reducing the disproportionate impact on minority communities. It would significantly increase quality of life for people with chronic pain conditions, and for those undergoing taxing medical treatments like chemotherapy. Additionally, it offers a huge commercial opportunity, potentially bringing in new jobs and businesses, and tax dollars that could enable the Victorian Government to improve infrastructure for future generations.
