Green wedges are vital habitat.

Australia has one of the highest rates of extinction in the world. This is a disgrace. All migratory species should be listed, and the protection of environments they require should be a top priority- above housing and development.

I am extremely concerned about the relentless growth of suburbs and population in Australia, and the disregard of habitats including water systems which allow wildlife to survive. This includes migratory birds. Australian governments have a responsibility to care for the whole biosphere, not just people. At present there is gross negligence towards our environment and maintenance of healthy biodiversity.
